

Voices of Story —Storytelling Group

You just never know when a story group will be born; the Voices of Story know that well. When Ada Forney taught a class in storytelling at a community college in Palm Bay a while back, some folks became so interested that they spent the next six weeks forming the constitution and by-laws that would set the foundation for a dynamite group. Ten members strong, including some snowbirds, the Voices of Story do a variety of programs. They can be found telling at libraries and historic houses, as well as for Civil War Programs, Halloween, and other holidays. They even boast a First Place trophy, given to one of their members at Murphreesboro, TN.

Working with well known causes, such as “Give Kids the World,” in their Tellabration programs, and in presentations to business organizations such as the Harris Corporation, the Voices of Story are always up for a new and challenging audience. They would like to see FSA build more bridges and create stronger foundations between FSA and the local story groups. They would like to see more story groups working as teams.

The contact person for Voices of Story, Ada Forney, can be reached at: 321-259-3822. The group meets at the Melbourne Square Mall Community Room at 7 p.m. on the first and third Tuesdays of the month. On library concert nights they meet at 7:30. For more information, request a copy of the Voices of Story brochure that outlines their mission statement and goals and provides a history of their performances over the years.

This group could show up anywhere, so watch out, story listeners...the Voices are coming.
